JAPANESE STATISTICS. The l'oputation of Japan le Rapidty

Mr. Ono, a Japanese statistician, has just published some interesting figures concerning the remarkable increase of the dome of Florence, and then to the population in that country during the present reign, and especially since 1972. January, 1872, the population was 33,111,000; In December, 1389, it had Increased to 40,070,000. Since 1897 the annual rate of Increase has been thirteen in every 1,000, so that, if this date is served, the population will double itself in 58 years. In England the rate of increase is 13.8 per 1,000, while in most European countries it is between islands to the Turkish empire, from six and nine, and in France and Spair much lower. Mr. One points out that the number of births in Japan is lower than in most civilized countries, except France, and that the number of illegitl mate children is smaller there than In European states. He therefore attributes the great Increase of the popusince the restoration and to a decrease
